Landcam: Journalists sensitized on land governance issues in Cameroon

RELUFA served as a framework for this workshop to sensitize journalists on land governance in Cameroon held on December 15, 2017. Organized as part of the LandCam project aimed at securing land and resource rights and improve land governance in Cameroon, this workshop aimed to sensitize and train the participants on the issues of land reform. This is to improve understanding, coverage and awareness of land and resource governance issues. The organizers are the Center for Environment and Development (CED), the International Institute for Environment and Development (IIED) and the Network for the Fight against Hunger (RELUFA) organization. They held the lead in the framework of this activity, the LandCam and GLA projects were presented to the participants. In addition, this circumstance made it possible to present the challenges and the stakes related to securing land rights in Cameroon and the recommendations resulting from the Multiparty Dialogue organized by REPAR. It is not to be forgotten the lively exchanges of proposals which thus made it possible to collect the contributions of the media to this challenge of securing the rights within the framework of this project. The latter enjoys the support of the European Union and will last for five years.
